

Sir Robert Throckmorton (1510-1581)

Richard Norwood, Dorothy Spann CENTER's seventh great grandfather, appears to the middle right in the tree of Captain Richard Spann. Richard Norwood was the son of William Norwood whose parents were Henry Norwood and Catherine Thockmorton. Catherine Thockmorton was the daughter of Robert Thockmorton and Muriel Berkeley.

Sir Robert Thockmorton:

Birth: 1510
Alcester; Warwickshire, England

Death: Feb. 12, 1581

St Peters Church, Coughton, Warwickshire, England where he is buried.

Sir Robert Throckmorton of Coughton Court, was a distinguished English Tudor courtier. Sir Robert was the eldest son and heir of Sir George Throckmorton (d.1552) by Katherine Vaux, daughter of Nicholas Vaux, 1st Baron Vaux of Harrowden (d.1523). He had many brothers, the most notable being, in descending seniority: Sir Kenelm, Sir Clement Throckmorton MP, Sir Nicholas Throckmorton(1515-1571), Thomas, Sir John Throckmorton(1524-1580), Anthony and George.

Robert Throckmorton may have trained at the Middle Temple, the inn attended by his father. At least three of his younger brothers and his own eldest son studied at Middle Temple, but as the heir to extensive estates he had little need to seek a career at court or in government. He was joined with his father in several stewardships from 1527 and was perhaps the servant of Robert Tyrwhitt, a distant relative by marriage of the Throckmortons, who in 1540 took an inventory of Cromwell's goods at Mortlake. He attended the reception of Anne of Cleves and with several of his brothers served in the French war of 1544. Three years later he was placed on the Warwickshire bench and in 1553 was appointed High Sheriff of Warwickshire. He was also elected as a knight of the shire (MP) for Warwickshire in 1553 and 1555. Three of his brothers also sat for Parliament, Nicholas as knight of the shire for Northamptonshire. Throckmorton's role in the succession crisis of 1553 is unknown, but his standing with Queen Mary is shown by her reputed answer to the news of Edward VI's death sent her by four of his brothers: 'If Robert had been there she durst have gaged her life and hazarded the hap'. In the autumn of 1553, Throckmorton was knighted and appointed constable of Warwick Castle. He continued to sit as MP for the shire until 1558, when he gave way to his eldest son, Thomas.

His Catholicism explains his disappearance from the Commons in the new reign, although the most Catholic of his brothers, Anthony Throckmorton, was to sit in the Parliament of 1563. Judged an 'adversary of true religion' in 1564, Throckmorton remained active in Warwickshire until his refusal to subscribe to the Act of Uniformity led to his removal from the commission of the peace. In 1577, the Bishop of Worcester, John Whitgift, listed Throckmorton as a Catholic and reckoned him to be worth 1,000 marks a year in lands and £1,000 in goods. Sir Robert Throckmorton continued the family in the Catholic tradition. He married his children into the leading Catholic families, and in these generations the increased persecution of the Catholic spawned many relatives who became involved in plots against the throne. The sons of his daughters Anne and Muriel, were Robert Catesby and Francis Tresham, and a third daughter Mary was married to Edward Arden, who was also convicted of treason and executed for his part in a plot to assassinate Queen Elizabeth in 1583.

Mary kept an excellent record of a woman persecuted for recusancy, documenting the fines and searches made at Coughton Court, that is still in the family archives. A nephew, Francis Throckmorton, was executed in 1584 for acting as a go-between for Mary, Queen of Scots and the Spanish Ambassador in an attempt to invade England and place Mary on the throne. A niece Elizabeth; also known as Bess, the daughter of Sir Nicholas, and lady-in-waiting to Queen Elizabeth, also got into trouble by secretly marrying Sir Walter Raleigh. He died on 12 February 1581, six days after making a will in which he styled himself of Weston Underwood, Buckinghamshire but asked to be buried at Coughton, where an alabaster and marble tomb was accordingly erected to his memory: there is a portrait at Coughton Court. He named as executors his eldest son Thomas and his sons-in-law Sir John Goodwin and Ralph Shelton, and as overseers another son-in-law Sir Thomas Tresham and his 'loving friend' Edmund Plowden.

Sir Robert married twice. Firstly in about 1527 to Muriel Berkeley (d.1542), daughter of Sir Thomas Berkeley, 5th Baron Berkeley (1472-1533) by his first wife, Eleanor Constable (c. 1485 - 1527), daughter of Sir Marmaduke Constable. The issue of Robert and Muriel included: Catherine (c. 1532-12 Feb 1580), married Henry (Robert) Norwood circa 1547 and had issue. Thomas Throckmorton of Coughton (1533-13 Mar 1614), married c.1556 Mary Whorwood (c.1535-28 Apr 1607) and had issue five daughters and two sons including John Throckmorton Esq. (1580-1614/15), father of Robert Throckmorton, 1st Baronet(1599-1650). Elizabeth (born c.1535), married Sir John Goodwin. No issue. Anne (c. 1541-16 Dec 1603), married Sir Ralph Sheldon and had issue. Mary (born c.1543), married Sir Edward Arden of Park Hall (1542-1583) and had a daughter, Catherine, who married Edward, 1st Baronet Devereux of Castle Bromwich, son of Walter Devereux, 1st Viscount Hereford. Secondly in about 1542 to Elizabeth Hussey (c.1510-23 Jan 1554), widow and formerly 3rd wife of Walter Hungerford, 1st Baron Hungerford of Heytesbury (d.1540), by whom she had been notoriously ill-treated, daughter of John Hussey, 1st Baron Hussey of Sleaford (1465-1537) by his second wife, Lady Anne Grey (c.1490-aft. 1537).

The issue of Robert and Elizabeth comprised the following four daughters: Anne (d. after 1605), married Sir William Catesby (1547-1598) on 9 Jun 1566 at Ashby St. Ledgers, Northamptonshire and had issue including Robert Catesby. Elizabeth, married Sir Anthony Tyringham and had a daughter, Elizabeth, who married Robert, the 1st of Fisher baronets. Muriel (d.1615), married Sir Thomas Tresham and had issue. Temperance, married Sir Randal Brereton. No issue.

Berkeley Castle

Berkeley Castle was the home of some of Dorothy Spann CENTER's ancestors. Richard Norwood appearing in the lower right in the tree for Captain Richard Spann, was the son of Henry Norwood and Catherine Thockmorton. Catherine Thockmorton was the daughter of Robert Thockmorton and Muriel BERKELEY. The castle has remained within the Berkeley family since they reconstructed it in the 12th century, except for a period of royal ownership by the Tudors. It is traditionally believed to be the scene of the murder of King Edward II in 1327.

Berkeley Castle (historically sometimes spelt Berkley Castle) is a castle in the town of Berkeley, Gloucestershire, UK). The castle's origins date back to the 11th century and it has been designated by English Heritage as a grade I listed building.^[1]

Berkeley Construction

The first castle at Berkeley was a motte-and-bailey, built around 1067 by William FitzOsbern shortly after the Conquest.^[4] This was subsequently held by three generations of the first Berkeley family, all called Roger de Berkeley, and rebuilt by them in the first half of the 12th century.^[5] The last Roger de Berkeley was dispossessed in 1152 for withholding his allegiance from the House of Plantagenet during the conflict of The Anarchy, and the feudal barony of Berkeley was then granted to Robert Fitzharding, a wealthy burgess of Bristol and supporter of the Plantagenets. He was the founder of the Berkeley family which still holds the castle.^{[4][6][7][8]}

In 1153-54, Fitzharding received a royal charter from King Henry II giving him permission to rebuild the castle,^[8] with the aim of defending the Bristol - Gloucester Road, the Severn estuary, and the Welsh border.^[citation needed] Fitzharding built the circular shell keep during 1153-56, probably on the site of the former motte. The building of the curtain wall followed, probably during 1160-90 by Robert and then by his son Maurice.^{[4][8]}

Much of the rest of the castle is 14th century and was built for Thomas de Berkeley, 3rd Baron Berkeley: Thorpe's Tower, to the north of the keep - the inner gatehouse to its southwest, and other buildings of the inner bailey.^[4]

Murder of Edward II

 Covered walkway leading to Edward II's supposed cell within the castle. The castle was ransacked in 1326 by the forces of Hugh Despenser, the favourite of King Edward II. In 1327, Edward was deposed by the Queen and her ally Roger Mortimer, and they made Thomas de Berkeley and his brother-in-law John Maltravers his joint custodians. They brought Edward to Berkeley Castle, and held him there for 5 months from April to September. During that time a band of Edward's supporters attacked, entered the castle and rescued him, only for him to be recaptured soon afterwards. It is possible that his captors then moved him around between several castles to make further rescue more difficult, before returning him to Berkeley Castle in September.^[9] Some commentators have claimed that Edwards' escape was actually successful, and that someone else was later murdered in his place.^{[3][10]}

Edward was reputedly murdered there on September 21, 1327 by unknown means, although popular stories of a red hot poker or suffocation persist.^[3] The cell where he is supposed to have been imprisoned and murdered can still be seen, along with the adjacent 11 m (36 ft) deep dungeon,^[1] which supposedly echoes the events of the murder every year on September 21.^[11]

The account given to Parliament at the time was simply that Edward had met with a fatal accident. The body was embalmed and remained lying in state at Berkeley for a month, in the Chapel of St John within the castle keep, before Thomas de Berkeley escorted it to Gloucester Abbey for burial.^{[4][12]} Thomas was later charged with being an accessory to the murder, but his defence was that it was carried out by the agents of Roger Mortimer while he was away from the castle, and in 1337 he was cleared of all charges.^[13]

Berkeley Castle in 1712

In the 14th century, the Great Hall was given a new roof and it is here the last court jester in England, Dickie Pearce, died after falling from the Minstrels' gallery. His tomb is in St Mary's churchyard which stands besides the castle. Adjoining the Great Hall is one of two of the original chapels, that includes painted wooden vaulted ceilings and a biblical passage (from the Book of Revelation), written in Norman French. This room also contains an illustrated vellum book of plainsong that was used in Catholic rites, before the family converted to Protestantism in the 16th century.

During the English Civil War, the castle still held sufficient significance for it to be captured in 1645 by Colonel Thomas Rainsborough, for the Parliamentarian side and after a siege which saw cannon being fired at point blank range from the adjacent church roof of Saint Mary the Virgin, the Royal garrison surrendered. As was usual, the walls were left breached after this siege but the Berkeley family were allowed to retain ownership on condition that they never repaired the damage to the Keep and Outer Bailey, still enforced today by the original Act of Parliament drawn up at the time; according to the Pevsner Architectural Guides,^[14][\[full citation needed\]](#) the breach is partially filled by a subsequent 'modern' rebuild, but this only amounts to a low garden wall, to stop people falling 28' from the Keep Garden, the original Castle's "motte".

In the 20th century, the 8th Earl Randall repaired and remodelled parts of the castle and added a new porch in the same Gothic style as the rest of the building. One change included an Art Nouveau take on a medieval bedroom.

The castle is surrounded by terraced Elizabethan gardens, including Elizabeth I's bowling green and a pine that is reputed to have been grown from a cutting taken from a tree at the Battle of Culloden in 1746.

Modern times

The courtyard in the 1840s

The castle is the oldest continuously occupied castle in England after the royal fortresses of the Tower of London and Windsor Castle, and the oldest to be continuously owned and occupied by the same family. It contains an antique four-poster bed that has been identified as the piece of furniture that has remained in continuous use by the same family the longest in the UK.^[15] The Berkeley family divide their time between the Castle and their other home, Spetchley Park, just outside Worcester, which has been in the family's ownership since 1606.^{[citation needed]}

With most areas open to the public since 1997, the private apartments occupy about 15% of the building and the rest is managed by the Berkeley Castle Charitable Trust.^{[citation needed]} A restoration appeal was launched in 2006 to raise £5.5 million needed to renovate and restore the Norman building.^[16]

Two ships of the Royal Navy have been named Berkeley Castle after the castle,^[17] as has a Great Western locomotive.^[18]

The castle was used for many scenes for the hit BBC children's television series The Ghost Hunter^{[citation needed]} and the first televised version of The Other Boleyn Girl.^[19]

Maurice de Berkeley (1436-1506)

Maurice was the grandfather of Muriel Berkley who married Robert Thockmorton. Their daughter, Catherine Thockmorton, married Henry Norwood. Their son, William Norwood was the father of Richard Norwood Dorothy Spann CENTER's seventh great grandfather.

Birth: 1436
Thornbury

Death: Sep., 1506
Thornbury
Gloucestershire, England

Knight of the Body to King Edward IV.

Second son of Sir James Berkeley and his third wife, Isabel Mowbray, grandson of Sir James Berkeley and Elizabeth Bluet, Sir Thomas Mowbray and Elizabeth Arundel.

Maurice married Isabel Meade, the daughter of London merchant Philip Meade and his wife, Isabel. They married in 1465 and had three sons and one daughter: Sir Maurice Lord Berkeley, Sir Thomas Lord Berkeley, James and Anne, wife of William Denys.

Nicknamed "the Lawier", he was heir to his older brother, William, Marquis of Berkeley, who completely disinherited him. After his brother's death he sued and recovered over fifty lands and manors that had been removed illegally from him. He was also co-heir to a cousin, Thomas Grenville Cokesey, and received the manors of Tetbury, Gloucestershie and Manningford Bruce, Wiltshire. Through his wife, they inherited and lived at Thornbury, Gloucester.

"As soon as the inquisitions after his brother's death were returned into Chancery, Maurice commenced proceedings to recover from the Crown some of the manors which the Marquess had given away, being advised that such alienations were illegal, and contrary to some old settlements and entails. In these litigations he was generally successful, the late Marquess, in his anxiety to barter his lands for honours and patronage, having often overlooked the nature of the titles by which he held them. Maurice's first success was the recovery of the manor of Sages in Slimbridge, consisting of seven tenements and 290 acres of land, and he entered into possession and held his first court there in 1499. Many other similar suits followed, with the like success, and while these were going on the manor and borough of Tetbury, and several others. descended to him as one of the heirs of the lord Breouse. In 1505 he claimed and recovered the advowson of the Church of Wotton-under-Edge, but immediately made it over to the Abbey of Tewkesbury. He also commenced a suit to recover the advowson of Slimbridge, held by Magdalen College, Oxford, which was settled by a compromise. The College retaining the advowson but paying him a sum of money, and undertaking to remember him in their prayers.

In his journeys to and from London, and when visiting his manor of Callowden, near Coventry, finding that he and his suite were not received at the Monastery of Combe, in Warwickshire, with the honour and respect due to him as descendant from one of its founders, Maurice exhibited a bill in Chancery against the Abbot and Monks, claiming his rights in respect of his descent from Thomas Mowbray, Duke of Norfolk, their founder, and obtained an acknowledgement of his claim." Unknown source.

Maurice died in 1506, and was buried with Isabel in the Church of the Augustine Friars, in London. His eldest son, Maurice, succeeded him.
